MULTIPLICITY WATCHLIST

OUR TOP PICKS OF BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL TV SHOWS

Summer time is over, temperatures are falling and days are getting shorter. Time to catch up on the latest Business and Financial TV Shows while working out (or relaxing . . .)

Yes, we admit, we do not always read books on distressed investing – we occasionally also indulge in binge watching TV shows. Here are some of the picks that our team enjoyed watching recently – we hope you enjoy them, too!.

Super Pumped: The Battle for Uber

on Showtime

Watch the meteoric rise and fall of Uber founder, Travis Kalanick who takes a win-at-all-costs approach to forge the fledgling start-up into a multi-billion-dollar tech titan. His ruthless attitude helps growing a list of enemies and adversaries. Every surge comes at a price – and as his visionary drive spirals out of control, it threatens to be the downfall of it all. Highly entertaining and Quentin Tarantino's voiceover does add a special thrill to the show.

The Dropout

on hulu

The rise and fall of the young college drop out Elizabeth Holmes who manages to con not only her strong investor base, but also her star studded board. The story explores the fine line between overpromising in a tech versus a medical start-up. The company had to close in 2018, but the story does not end there – Elizabeth Holmes was subsequently investigated and was found guilty of fraud in early 2022, awaiting sentencing in October 2022.

WeCrashed

on appletv+

Adam Neumann, the flamboyant founder of WeWork wants to revolutionize the way we work. With the helps of Japanese Softbank they want to scale quickly and throw money at every problem. Things don't quite work out as planned and while Softbank – once again – burns silly amounts of cash, he walks away as a billionaire.

Also this story does not quite end with the end of the movie: During this very quarter, Adam Neumann manages to raise another $350m for his latest venture – Flow. The story will continue!
